

HE ANSWERED THE CALL

Coping with Our Loss—The Family's, Friends', and Firefighters' Perspectives

By Lysa Phillips

One of Anthony Sean "Sauce" Phillips' biggest desires in life was to become a firefighter. After seven years of prayer and waiting for the call, God answered.

Filled with excitement and encouragement from his wife, Lysa, and his mother, Dee, Anthony walked into Engine Company 10, dubbed "The House of Pain," in Washington, DC, ready to do what God had called him to do, serve others and his community.

HE ANSWERED THE CALL: Coping with Our Loss—The Family's, Friends', and Firefighters' Perspectives shares the real-life, sensitive story of Anthony "Sauce" Phillips' final call to duty by those who loved him and those who worked beside him, their emotional struggles caused by his passing, how it impacted them personally and professionally, and the mechanisms they have used to cope with it over the years.

Losing a loved one is traumatic, whether a family member or a friend. Losing them in the line of duty—without warning—can be even more detrimental. It is also an overwhelming, frightening, and painful experience. Those left to mourn often find themselves in a complex web of emotions. Although death is beyond our control, the wonderful memories left behind can shine the light on how such a tragedy can transform into a testimony for others as they cope with their loss.

"An emotional, riveting look at the effects of line of duty death!"
